Minors

Minors are a trajectory made up of elective training activities under a central theme. Its purpose is for the student to acquire skills or tools from a field other than those that constitute the central core of undergraduate training, using subjects from other curricula.

To obtain a minor, the student must complete 24 credits from a group of minor-related courses.

Minor	About this minor
Doing Business in Latin America	The minor in Doing Business in Latin America will complement the academic training of students with specific courses taught in English, in addition to the current mandatory courses. This proposal will not only allow students to complement their academic training in a language widely used in the international business field but will also contribute to enhancing the Global Vision dimension in their graduation profile.
Latin American studies	The minor in Latin American Studies will allow you to develop your world view in Latin America and the Caribbean and will enable you to perform professionally in the region. Through interdisciplinary learning, with a critical perspective, both academic and methodological, you will delve into key issues for Latin America and the Caribbean such as its history, politics, international relations and culture.
Social intervention and innovation	The minor in Social Intervention and Innovation will provide you with tools to analyze the complexity of social reality, manage community participation mechanisms, form interdisciplinary work teams, and generate creative solutions to social problems
